PSYCHIATRY: JOURNAL FOR THE STUDY OF INTERPERSONAL PROCESSES seeks to provide a medium for effective communication between psychiatry, the social sciences, and all other branches of the study of man and his individual and collective problems in living. The journal is addressed to all serious students of these problems, to all who are applying current remedial measures, and to all who are searching for more effective solutions. The aim is to encourage an integrative and truly cumulative growth of knowledge by facilitating mutual understanding among various disciplines and overcoming tendencies toward insularity. The journal attempts to be broadly communicative without sacrificing technical quality. It is designed to present accounts of clinical and field observations, reports of original research, surveys and critiques of scientific literature, and studies concerning methodology, epistemology, and philosophy. The Foundation, its Trustees, and the Editor can accept no responsibility for any statement of fact or opinion made by the contributors.

INSTRUCTIONS TO AUTHORS

Manuscripts are submitted to PSYCHIATRY with the understanding that they have not been published or accepted for publication elsewhere, in whole or in part, and that they are not being simultaneously considered by any other publisher. The receipt of manuscripts is acknowledged promptly, and a decision is reported to the author as rapidly as a careful evaluation procedure permits. Articles are accepted subject to editorial modification in accordance with the journal's particular style and requirements. Any such editorial changes are made in consultation with the author.

Since PSYCHIATRY is an interdisciplinary journal, articles submitted should be so written as to be communicative to readers outside the author's special field. The first paragraph should indicate the scope of the presentation. A biographical footnote, in the indicated style, is required, and it is the author's responsibility to verify all references and quotations. The reference style shown in current issues of PSYCHIATRY should be followed. The author is also responsible for adequate disguise of identities in clinical material. Tables, charts, or other illustrative material should be used only for presentations which cannot be made clearly in textual form.

Manuscripts should be double-spaced throughout and should be submitted in duplicate. They should be accompanied by a stamped, addressed manuscript envelope.

The cost of changes made by authors in proofs will be charged to them. The price of reprints, which depends on the printed length and the quantity desired, can be calculated when proof is sent the author, and the author may order them at that time.

Permission must be requested for lengthy quotation, reprinting, or other reproduction material published (or accepted) by PSYCHIATRY.
